Reforms scaled up; countries improve transparency, accountability, and trust. Regional and global human rights-based dialogues held, knowledge and skills improved, and national consensus built. Network of countries strengthens participation and starts a common force. High-level groups (judges and health ministers) commit to resolving priority problems. Different views shared, dialogue initiated, and problems assessed. National and regional multi-stakeholder arrangements appear. Regional and global human rights-based dialogues hold knowledge and skills improved, and national consensus built. Countries progressively adopt HRBAs to health services.

Figure 2. Theory of change and results areas.